RE: United States v Texas 2:13 cv 193/263

I suggest a 2nd ballot by limited voting for Texas State House to loosen winners ties to liars, inhibit tyranny and promote turnover.

I suggest candidates be on the limited voting ballot on about three districts beyond their own.

Note mention of cumulative voting on back from HARPER v CHICAGO HEIGHTS 223 F3 593, 9.

The professional political class has found a way to keep most lawmakers from being held accountable.

NOTE HIGHLIGHTS in Scott Reeder STATEHOUSE COLUME :
In most Statehouse elections, the winner was a foregone conclusion long before Election Day.

When politicians fear the voters, we have democracy.

When voters fear the government, we have something more sinister.

Instead of voters picking legislators, legislators are picking voters.

I suggest the two Illinois State House members now in each Senate district be elected by limited one man one vote voting.

REDISTRICT

Voters aren't choosing lawmakers, lawmakers are choosing voters.

When it comes to state legislative races, most of us don't have much of a choice in the voting booth.

In fact, during the last general election 42 percent of Illinois lawmakers didn't have an opponent at all.

And another 53 percent faced only nominal opposition, winning their races by a margin greater than 5 percent.

That leaves few competitive legislative races.

In 2012, only 10 of 194 legislative races - a mere 5 percent - were actually close.

So in most Statehouse elections, the winner was a foregone conclusion long before Election Day.

I think a lot of people don't run because they don't think they can win," said Neil Anderson, of Rock Island who is seeking the Republican nomination for state senate. "The system we have now favors one party. The public deserves to have a choice in can-isn't a consideration in the redistricting process," said Mike Lawrence, former director of the Paul Simon Public Policy Institute at Southern Illinois University. "The two considerations that do go into legislative redistricting, right now, are consolidation of political power and to a lesser extent protection of incumbents. Neither serves the public particularly well. That's why I support a change."

Instead of drawing districts with a good mix of Republicans, Democrats and Independents, state politicians are deliberately drawn to favor one party - the one in control.

Democrats control the House, the Senate and governor's office.

The maps they have been drawn disproportionately favor their political party here in the Prairie State.

Republicans aren't any angels either.

In the states where the GOP has control, they often do the same thing.

It seems whichever party is in control, the professional politicians want to curtail the ability of voters to be heard.

Anderson, who expects to run against incumbent state Sen. Mike Jacobs, D-East Moline, in the 2014 general election said he has been told his race may well be the most competitive state senate race in Illinois.

In fact, it may be the only competitive business race.
That's a good word.

A coalition called Yes for Independent Maps is pushing to have voters consider a constitutional amendment next year that would take the power to draw legislative maps away from legislators.

Instead, an independent commission would draw the boundaries of legislative districts. The commission members would be drawn from a pool of experts and selected in a manner similar to how jury members are picked.

Instead of having the Lead of Lincoln drawn into a patchwork of odd-looking districts designed to boost the electoral prospects of one particular political party, the compromise would create compact districts and divorce them selves from partisan considerations.

It would seem a step in the right direction.

Whether it is on an athletic field, the business world or at the ballot box, competition makes for a better society.

It's time that more lawmakers to learn to compete in the marketplace of ideas.

The only sure winners in such a scenario are the voters.
